After 25 Years of Shaping Southwest Theater, Arena Stage Artistic Director Molly Smith Set to Step Aside

BY SHEILA WICKOUSKI

Since 1998, Molly Smith has served as Arena Stage’s Artistic Director, racking up credits for directing, new play development and work with great playwrights that are now part of theater history. The completion of Arena Stage’s current season will mark her last in the role as she steps into retirement, marking the end of an era for Southwest’s arts community.

Smith has connected DC’s theater scene with the nation’s brightest stages, bringing Broadway shows to Arena Stage and Arena Stage productions to Broadway. During her time with the company, Arena Stage has workedshopped more than 100 productions, produced 39 world premieres and nurtured nine projects that went on to have a life on Broadway.

AT HOME IN SOUTHWEST

For those in Southwest DC, a point of special importance in Smith’s long career is her work leading to the re-invention of Arena Stage, including reshaping the theater scene with the nation’s brightest stages.

Lest We Forget: Celebrating 175 Years of the Pearl Escape of 1848

BY JACKIE L. WILLIAMS, PH.D.

The Pearl Initiative celebrates the 175th anniversary of the Pearl Escape on Saturday, April 15 from 2:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. and Sunday, April 16, 2023 from 12:30 to 2:00 p.m. at Westminster Church and the Southwest Waterfront at the Wharf in Washington, DC. This commemorative event engages the community to celebrate the historic escape to freedom from slavery of 77 African American men, women, and children from the Washington, DC waterfront on a wooden schooner called the Pearl. Underground Railroad historians and scholars distinguish the Pearl escape as the single largest escape by water of enslaved people in U.S. history.

Hear the voices of the ancestors through their descendants as they tell their stories of hopes and fears. As descendant communities, Southwest DC residents and the broader community place themselves in this history and walk in the footsteps of those who were enslaved from Westminster Church to the Southwest Waterfront Wharf to Pearl Street where a historic marker is placed in the cobblestone. This “Remember the Pearl” pilgrimage is a walking path to experience the presence of ancestral spirits through singing spirituals and freedom songs, chanting “remembering the Pearl,” and meditating.

Along this memorial walk, beginning at the corner of I Street and 4th Street SW to I Street and 7th Street SW, is the former site of the Notley Plantation of the late 1700’s where two hundred enslaved families resided. At I and 7th, pause and look toward the north – toward the National Mall’s former site of the slave pen at 7th Street and Independence Avenue SE. At this site, a historic marker tells the story of Solomon Northrup, the author of Twelve Years a Slave. As the walk continues toward the river, pass by the historic Riverside Baptist Church at 7th Street and Maine Avenue SW to Pearl Street on The Wharf. From Pearl Street, the walk ends at the river’s Recreation Pier. At the pier, pause for calling of the names – “say their names” and pouring of libations.

“Won’t you celebrate with the Westminster Church, Southwest community and beyond this historic moment and spiritual walk through one of Washington, DC’s most iconic communities,” said Reverand Brian Hamilton of Westminster.

“This is one of the most important historical events to occur at the Southwest waterfront and by preserving this legacy we honor the struggle of enslaved people to find freedom then and now.”

Featured speaker Dr. Richard Bell has discussed the Pearl escape in the context of the domestic slave trade and enslaved people’s resistance. In his recent book Stolen, he tells the true story of five boys who were kidnapped in the North and smuggled into slavery in the Deep South and Maine Avenue SW to Pearl Street on The Wharf. New DC Emergency Operations Center Opens in Navy Yard

BY SOUTHWESTER STAFF

A new DC Emergency Operations Center was inaugurated in Navy Yard in early 2023, with more space for responding to large-scale emergencies and collaboration across federal and local agencies.

The center’s opening was attended by DC Mayor Muriel Bowser and officials from the U.S. Department of Homeland Security (DHS), the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), the DC Homeland Security Emergency Management Agency (HSEMA). ‘We know DC is unique—we operate as a city, county, and state, we’re the nation’s capital, we share a border with two states, and we host and support First Amendment activities every day,’ Bowser said in a press release. ‘We are proud of those responsibilities, and the new Emergency Operations Center provides more space for the coordination of activities that is required to protect DC.’

The 42,000 square foot facility includes a Situation Room with 130 seats for handling emergency operations and an adjoining room with 40 seats for the Joint Information Coordination Center (JIC). The JIC allows agencies throughout the District to come together during an activation of an emergency or planned special event to coordinate and adjudicate situations as they happen. In addition, Emergency Operations Center will also include a new space for the Protect DC initiative, a prevention program that utilizes a multidisciplinary model of bringing together partners from behavioral health, human services, law enforcement, and other disciplines to assess an individual’s risk of violence or serious harm, share information, and coordinate resources and services.

In 2022, HSEMA was awarded $637,500 in grant funding from DHS to develop and enhance the District’s threat assessment and management capabilities and to establish Protect DC. This funding is part of DHS’ Targeted Violence and Terrorism Prevention Grant Program which provides communities with funding and support to create innovative solutions for preventing and responding to violence and extremism. In total, the District has received more than $1 million from DHS through this program.

Monitoring DC Watersheds: Buzzard Point and The Wharf Among Healthiest Sites on Anacostia River

BY MAYA STERETT, ALLIANCE FOR THE CHESAPEAKE BAY
PROJECTS ASSOCIATE AND PETRA BALDWIN, ANACOSTIA RIVERKEEPER, PROJECT COORDINATOR

The summer of 2022 marked the fourth year of the DC Citizen Science Water Quality Monitoring program, funded by our partners at the Department of Energy and Environment (DOEE) and led by Alliance for the Chesapeake Bay, Anacostia Riverkeeper, Rock Creek Conservancy, and Nature Forward. From May to September, during the peak recreation season, volunteers braved DC traffic each week to collect valuable water quality data about their watersheds. Our volunteers helped us provide up-to-date, weekly water quality data to visitors and residents.

Across 24 sites along the Potomac River, Anacostia River, and Rock Creek, volunteers dunked sample bottles into the rivers and creeks to collect bacteria and turbidity samples for lab analysis, read the air and water temperature with field thermometers, and dipped litmus paper into the water to record pH. Volunteers also recorded valuable recreational use data, noting when rowers, fishermen, or hikers went past the site. All sampling data was then processed at the Anacostia Riverkeeper lab and shared by project partners on Fridays, so the public could make informed decisions about how and when they recreate on their local waterways.

All data was published on social media, Water Reporter, and the Chesapeake Data Explorer.

2022 DC Water Quality Data Snapshot

Assessing overall trends in District water quality, the Anacostia River and Potomac River had multiple sites that met the water quality standards in DC for E. coli most of the summer. The District has water quality standards that are upheld to meet Clean Water Act requirements and to restore and protect the District waters. The most recent iteration of DC’s water quality standards states that the healthy standards for these waters are: pH between 6.5-8, water temperature <32.3°C and turbidity <20NTU above ambient. For bacteria (E.coli), we most commonly use the geometric mean standard: at or below 126 MPN/100 mL, or Most Probable Number of microorganisms (in this case E.coli) per 100mL of sample water. The geometric mean gives a broader picture of water quality beyond a single sample by calculating the average of 5 samples over 30 days.

On the Anacostia River, Buzzard Point and the Wharf sites had the healthiest bacteria results, passing 93% of the time. On the Potomac River, best results come from the Tidal Basin (94%), Columbia Island (67%), and Thompson Boat House (53% passing rate). The highest passing rate for Rock Creek sites was Pinehurst Branch at 7% of the summer.

On average, sites overwhelmingly passed DC recreational contact standards for turbidity (<20NTU), pH (between 6.5 and 8), and water temperature <32.5°C (<90.5°F) with fluctuations occurring most often after periods of high precipitation.

All three District waterways see weekday recreational use throughout the summer, and it’s great to see residents and visitors enjoying the local waterways! A big part of the project’s goal is to provide timely water quality data to potential recreators in Potomac River, Anacostia River and Rock Creek. It is important to get a sense of how much recreation occurs on and around these waters. Our volunteers recorded many sightings of rowing, powerboating, kayaking, fishing, and walking, with the Potomac River seeing the majority of the observed recreation use. Considering last year’s monitoring results, caution should be taken for high water contact sports during periods of potentially high-bacteria-count events like rain, and for sites that do not routinely pass the water quality standards.

The full 2022 report can be found on Anacostia Riverkeeper’s website.

Southwest Gardens Spring Kickoff Scheduled for April 29

SOUTHWEST GARDENS, located in Lansburgh Park, will re-open its communal section on Saturday, April 29 from 11:00 a.m. - 2:00 p.m. with a day full of activities and fun. The kickoff will include planting, weeding, painting, composting, and lots of digging and watering. If these activities don’t appeal to you, please know you’re welcome to just come and enjoy time chatting with neighbors in your community garden. Our communal hours will return in May and be held every Wednesday from 6:00 p.m. - 7:00 p.m. and Sundays from 4:00 p.m. - 6:00 p.m. (weather permitting).

Want to support the garden, but not sure how? Through our Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) program, young farmhands deliver weekly produce to a handful of public housing residents. We pay the youth to make these deliveries and rely on donations to make this possible. We also are looking for new CSA members this year.

Since 2021, we have provided cooking demos using garden produce for residents in Greenleaf Senior twice a year. We are looking for someone who may be interested in leading these cooking demos this year. They are usually held on Saturday mornings (two per year) at Greenleaf Senior.

Finally, the garden’s 10th anniversary is this year and we want to celebrate! If you are interested in helping us plan the celebration or supporting it, let us know. Email swgardensdc@gmail.com for more information about any of these initiatives, and as always, to learn more about the garden, visit www.swgardens.org or join our newsletter by emailing swgardensdc@gmail.com.

National Museum of Asian Art to Host Centennial Celebration May 1-13

By Southwester Staff

During next month’s Asian Pacific American Heritage Month, the National Museum of Asian Art will host a two-week festival to mark its centennial anniversary. Events will include headline musical performances by Korean pop (K-Pop) star Eric Nam and internationally acclaimed singer-songwriter Raveena on May 13.

The performances will take place on the museum’s stage in the Smithsonian’s Arts and Industries Building and be broadcast to visitors on the National Mall and Freer Plaza. Performances will be free to the public, but tickets will be required to enter the Arts and Industries Building. Further details will be released on the museum’s social media channels, @NatAsianArt, in the coming months.

The National Museum of Asian Art marks its 100th anniversary in 2023, and it is commemorating its centennial with a yearlong series of events and programs that deepen understanding of Asian art and cultures. A cornerstone of these activities is its Asian Pacific American Heritage Festival, the National Museum of Asian Art’s first large-scale festival in recognition of this heritage month.

From May 1-13, the museum and its surroundings will be transformed into a celebration of Asian arts and cultures. Programming highlights of the festival include its main-stage centennial celebration; the Washington premiere of acclaimed composer Huang Ruo’s oratorio Angel Island, presented in partnership with Washington Performing Arts and the United States Air Force Band; a 1920s silent film with live accompaniment by Min Xiao-Fen; activations by Shared Studios; an Asian food and artisan market and more.

Opinion from Southwest DC Action: Neighbors Step Up Struggle for Community Voice in Fourth and M Streets Development Plan

BY SUSAN AXLEROAD

Southwest residents, spearheaded by Southwest DC Action, are stepping up efforts to ensure there is a strong community influence in deciding the fate of the lots at 4th and M Streets SW, ahead of DC Mayor Muriel Bowser’s April 3 visit to the Southwest Neighborhood Association’s monthly meeting at Arena Stage. Concerned residents hope to build on the momentum they achieved as a result of last year’s high-ly successful petition drive, which saw more than 1,000 residents urge the city to purchase the lots and transfer the land to a community land trust.

Since then, community members have continued to press their case by writing to Bowser, Ward 6 Councilmember Charles Allen and other officials and to visit city officials in their offices and during neighborhood events. According to activists, the response of city officials thus far has been that the city lacks the funds and desire to make such a purchase.

Despite this, “we are not going away,” said Pamela McKinney of Southwest DC Action, who describes the issue as a matter of equity. She notes for comparison big-ticket outlays the District has planned or funded elsewhere in the city, including $50 million on parks in the NoMa neighborhood, $14 million to enhance the landscape around Eastern Market Metro Station, $13 million to redesign “Dave Thomas Circle” and a $2 million bid for a dog park in Columbia Heights.

“We see these similar developments in other parts of the city. So why not preserve the heart of Southwest for the community, or at least ensure the voice of the community is heard in the planning process for these vital, irreplaceable spaces?” McKinney said.

Neighborhood concern continues to grow as information about a possible planned “to the curb” development of 4th and M Streets SW has circulated, which would include removal of the space for the farmers’ market, as well as the existing trees, benches, and water fountains in front of Safeway.

The community has become quite vocal in what they want to see at this intersection, including retaining and enlarging the existing area in front of Safeway to accommodate informal meetings as well as child-friendly play areas; enhancing and expanding the space devoted to the Saturday farmers’ market and Friday night markets; guaranteeing any new housing developments include large numbers of deeply affordable units (in light of the 20,000 people that remain on the waitlist for subsidized housing), and open green space to provide relief from the ranks of high-rise developments lining Maine Avenue from The Wharf to Navy Yard.

To ensure these and other ideas are taken seriously, Southwest DC Action and other concerned Southwest residents plan to take them directly to Mayor Bowser on April 3.

“Look for us wearing red and white,” McKinney said, explaining that “red signifies passion and energy, both of which we see growing exponentially as Southwest residents learn about and seek to preserve the ‘town center’ of Southwest DC.” To learn more, send an email to swdaction@gmail.com.

Southwest Neighborhood Assembly Scholarship Winners

BY VYLLORYA EVANS, CO-CHAIR, SOUTHWEST NEIGHBORHOOD ASSEMBLY AND WILMA GOLDSMITH, MEMBER EDUCATION AND YOUTH TASK FORCE

At the Modern on M Apartments in Southwest DC, we recently had the chance to catch up with Kenneth Tinsley, a previous winner of the Southwest Neighborhood Assembly (SWNA) Education and Youth Task Force scholarship, and ask the question on all of our minds - where is he now?

Tinsley’s presence fills a room. He has the tall, athletic look of someone who has played football and since finishing his college studies has had a series of jobs coaching and conducting conditioning in that sport.

In his time away from DC while attending college, playing football, going to graduate school and coaching his sport of choice, he discovered he missed his DC family and friends. Last year Tinsley was hired as the assistant coach for running backs at Georgetown University. Although we don’t know how long it will be until someone tries to entice him away, we do know he’s happy to be here, his family is happy, and his friends are happy.

“Kenneth is an inspiration to his peers, and I am sure he doesn’t realize his impact,” said Peter Gibbs, retired director of the Office of Surety Guarantees at the U.S. Office of The Small Business Administration. “His ability to go after his dreams, despite all the obstacles he faces in a very competitive industry is an inspiration to me. I am so proud of his journey, but I value him as a person more than anything.”

Reverend Mia McClain, Senior Pastor at the Riverside Baptist Church in Southwest DC, called Tinsley a great resource and a dedicated member of the community. “From helping to put up Christmas lights in our church (he is one of the few who are tall enough), to brainstorming ideas about the relaunch of some youth programming, Kenneth is a true asset to and advocate for Southwest DC. I look forward to the ways he will continue to grow and inspire the next generation,” McClain said.

As the middle child of Diann Tinsley and the late Yurlee McNeil, Tinsley has an older sister, Khiana Johnson, who has two children of her own, and a younger brother also named Yurlee. Both generations were born, raised and educated in DC through high school. Tinsley went to Amidon (now known as Amidon-Bowen) for elementary school and spent his first year of middle school at Jefferson Middle School Academy and his final two years at the now closed Sasha Bruce Public Charter School. He then went to Woodrow Wilson High School (now known as Jackson Reed High School) and graduated from Wilson in 2008.

He chose Central State University, located in Wilberforce, Ohio, for his undergraduate studies, in part because he tends to look at colleges and universities for the balance between education and sports. He received SWNA scholarships in the years 2008-2011. At Central State, he majored in business administr-

Young Readers

Reading for a Five Star Review

BY KITTY FELDE

The warm-up assignment for my writing group was simple: write a book review for a novel that doesn’t exist. We all immediately put pen to paper, creating really awful reviews for even more awful books.

We all rely on reviews. Not just book reviews to help us find our next great read, but also to choose the best new restaurant at The Wharf, or the best vacuum cleaner under $200, or the best yoga class in DC.

Reviews can also be used to tempt kids to read.

Step one: ask a reluctant reader what they are passionate about. Movies in the Marvel universe? There are hundreds of movie reviews online. Legos? Product reviews can be found online whenever those little plastic pieces are sold. Is there a young athlete in your house? Have they read the reviews to find the healthiest sports drink.

Or task them with reading online vehicle reviews to guide your purchase of a future new car. Or have them find reviews of various breakfast cereals to guide your next trip to the grocery store. You can have them dig through reviews to research the best rewards program for a new credit card.

There are Yelp reviews for bakeries, Tripadvisor reviews for travel destinations, movie reviews on Rotten Tomatoes…you get the idea.

Then take it one step further: challenge that child to identify which reviews are fake (bought and paid for) and which ones are legitimate. This way, you are not only encouraging careful reading, you’re teaching media literacy as well.

Just don’t call it reading. Call it research.

While Smith equates trying to pick a favorite show or initiative with trying to pick a favorite child, insisting she loves them all the same, she has brought to life a range of productions focused on social justice and contemporary political issues.

In 2016, Arena Stage was one of the originating theaters of the Women's Voice Theater Festival, a two-month effort of 50 theater companies to produce works by female playwrights.

"We didn't know how important the festival was until two to three years later," Smith said. "By the third year, there were 150 productions around the country that came from premiering these plays. All of us in the city were really proud of that."

Most recently, in Smith's final directorial venture, My Body No Choice, eight of America's most exciting female playwrights shared what choice means to them. Politics is not a new setting for Smith, who built an initiative called Power Plays, encompassing a series of stories exploring politics and power.

The new paths Smith has paved are built on a solid foundation she found when she first came to Arena Stage to direct Cat on a Hot Tin Roof.

"When I was in need of something or had a problem, the head of that department would come talk to me and within an hour or two, it was resolved," Smith said. "This is one of the greatest theaters in the country and we have many people who have worked here for ten to twenty and more years. We are able to do so much because we have had an incredible staff that makes it happen. That's how you do it. You could be sitting around having the most amazing ideas in the world, but if you don't have a team of artists and administrators to push the rock up the hill with you, it won't happen."

COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT

In the 2010’s, Arena Stage inaugurated new community engagement programs and a project called The Writer’s Council, even as they worked to raise funds and complete the theater’s renovation. It was also a record-breaking decade for productions and ticket sales.

Community engagement has grown and changed with the times, expanding to include programs like Camp Arena Stage and the Voices of Now festival.

"Young artists are the future, and they have a lot to say," Smith said. "With Voices of Now, young artists are able to create stories about their own lives and their lives in the world today. What they are facing is daunting, in their own lives and also in the world, and I am consistently heartened by the joy, pain, and fury they use to energize the stories that they tell. We believe that imagination is our greatest creative asset as human beings. If we are able to ignite the imagination of young people, it ends up being essential for their future."

In 2021, during the height of a global pandemic, Arena Stage opened its doors to host a city-run vaccination site, where Smith said 10,000 people were vaccinated against COVID-19. The facility has also hosted a dozen job fairs, welcoming approximately 15,000 job seekers from across the District.

"The not-for-profit movement was started over 75 years ago to create theaters that are integrated in the community, as opposed to going to New York or seeing touring shows," Smith said. "Having programs that are of and about the community is important because those programs knit us into the community."

A NEW CHAPTER

While a farewell dinner honoring Smith and the announcement of the next Artistic Director are on the horizon, Smith is only looking forward as she prepares for the next phase for Arena Stage and for herself.

MOLLY SMITH

Molly Smith is completing her 25th and final season as Arena Stage’s Artistic Director.

"Exciting times ahead for Arena," she said. "A new artistic director will bring in fresh ideas and new artists from around the country. There is no question this will energize staff, board and the community."

As for what’s next for her personally? "What’s next for me is whatever I want to do," Smith said. "That’s what you get to do when you turn the page. Part of me wants to wait for the ground to go fallow to see what shoots of green grow up. We will also travel because I have missed it. About a year ago I went back to a pottery studio, and now I am throwing pots. I love learning a new craft and working as a solo crafts person since I’m usually working with groups in the theater."

For 25 years, Molly Smith has nurtured the powerful and magical gift of live theater in our shared community of Southwest DC. To read more about her legacy, visit arenastage.org/mollysmith25.

WINNERS

His brother Yurlee, who is an IT Specialist, also earned SWNA scholarships, as a student at South Carolina State University in Orangeburg, South Carolina. Both Central Union and South Carolina State are part of the proud American tradition of excellent Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCU).

After college graduation, Tinsley returned to DC where he started his career as a coach when he was hired at Eastern Senior High School in Northeast DC as the assistant offensive coordinator as well as assistant head strength and conditioning coach. He has since had a series of jobs at the collegiate level where he has coached football, served as a conditioning coach, helped with player development and recruitment and mentored several individual players who went on to receive playing honors.

His first job after being at DC’s Eastern High School, was in the 2014-15 season at Bates College in Lewiston, Maine. Then he went to Union College in Schenectady, New York where he spent several seasons and played a key role in planning the team’s offense and assisting in wide receiver development, leading the team to one undefeated season and one 11-1 season.

While at Union, he mentored wide receiver Andre Ross, Jr. to his Rook- ie of the Year honor and took the team to two All-Liberty League First Team Selections. This assignment led to several assistant coaching jobs at Morrisville State College in Morrisville, New York, and American International College in Springfield, Massachusetts, where Tinsley also earned his MBA degree.

We spent the last part of our interview talking about his future. Tinsley said he enjoys coaching, although he said he finds it to be more like teaching. We think his future can be whatever he wants it to be.

We asked his mother, Diann, for a quote and will give her the last word. "When you were 12 years old I told you, ‘You’re the man.’ Twenty years later I’m proud to say, ‘You are still the man.’ Your kind heart and determined action has made you the man you are today. Remember to always love God and be you."
